THE CRUISE SHIP INDUSTRY:

HOW IT AFFECTS SEA LIFE.

Entry # 10

Introduction

Every year, the Caribbean Princess stops at the Port of Saint John in New Brunswick. The Caribbean Princess is a Grand-class cruise ship owned and operated by Princess Cruises, with a capacity of over 3,600 passengers. It has 900 balcony staterooms and a deck of mini-suites. Because of its large passenger capability, you can expect there'd be wide arrange of people touring Saint John. Since Saint John is so close to the ocean, you can expect most of it's attractions to be close to natural bodies of water. Approximately 52% of Saint John's most popular attractions are around, lakes, rivers, or the ocean. (If you only include outdoor attractions, it's a whopping 79%). Unfortunately, When you include the combined impacts that both cruise ships and high amounts tourists can have have life below water, the possibility of water pollution only increases. To combat that: There some solutions that Princess cruises has used, and could use to reduce the amount of pollution that gets into New Brunswick's waters.

History

The location of the Port of Saint John was first visited by Samuel de Champlain in 1604, it later became the site of a French stronghold known as Port La Tour, which supposedly lasted from 1631-1645. It wasn't until the eighteenth century that it officially became the Port of Saint John. Princess cruises started in 1965. The first time Princess sailed into Canada was in 1989. The Lunard Princess couldn't make its intended stop in Bermuda because of a hurricane, so it sailed north and ended up in Saint John instead. Ever since then, the cruise line has returned to the port almost every year. The Caribbean Princess was built July 4th, 2003 and started service April 2nd, 2003.

Pollution

There are many ways that cruise ships have been know to pollute the ocean Trash, oil, sewage, and grey/black/bilge water can leave the boat and go into the ocean. Plus, tourists can have an impact on the environment has well, disturbing wildlife, throwing trash into the ocean/lakes/rivers, and even exploiting creatures (smuggling them on board the ship) and their natural recourse can have an impact on on the environment. Looking at the Caribbean Princess specifically, there was a
